A Review

"Charley's Aunt" Glitters at Lexington Theatre

by HILDE SCHUSTER
LEXINGTON - By updating Brandon Thomas' farce, "Charley's Aunt" to the 1920's, the Lexington Conservatory Theatre Company made a very clever decision. Some people's reaction to the play is lukewarm because of the frequency it is performed by the theatre companies throughout the country, but the audience at Thursday evening's opening night performance was delighted by the Lexington Conservatory Theatre's glittering rendition of this well known comedy.

The play was written and originally produced in 1892. Usually the setting and costuming in performances of the play reflect this period. The Lexington Conservatory Theatre performance, however, reflected the craziness of the roaring twenties and made use of the flapper style clothing of the times, the flippant humor and genuine 1920's period music.
